A still later uspaces than the above to the Gazette reads as follows:

"It has been an anxious day in Washington. The members of the Cabinet have been in session or in individual conferences during most of the day. They have had dispatches from the leading civil and military officers in the doubtful Southern States. They have taken steps which, so far as lies in the Executive power, will preserve and protect the purity of the ballot box, and secure a fair and honest count. The drift of the information from the three central States presented to the Cabinet, was, in substance, this: In South Carolina the Republicans still maintain the accuracy of the slaims of Gov. Chamberlain to a majority of at least 8,000 for Hayes and Wheeler, and Chamberlain. In several of the counties, especially those along the Georgia border, and in what is called the up-hill country, there have been several desperate attempts by the Ku Klux, or desperate persons, to seize the ballot boxes and destroy them. These attempts, with a few exceptions, have been defeated. Precautionary measures have been taken, which, it is thought, will effectually guard the rest of the ballot boxes from like danger until after the official count is decided. The counting will take place at Columbia, where nearly all the troops left in the State have been concentrated, and where what State through the considerable danger that many of the witnesses against persons who have committed and attempted election frauds were in danger of their lives at Aiken, where a great many arrests have been in made. It will also be seen that the Democratic Returning Board, in 1872, admitted that Kellogg had, in this parish a majority of about 1,000. In the parish of East Feliciana, this year, a few white Republicans at-tempted to put a ticket in the field, but were notified by prominent Democrats that such a ticket would not be permitted. as far as has been heard from, at the election, there was consequently not one Re-publican vote permitted to be cast. Additional returns from the parishes don't materially change the result as telegraphed Saturday. Of the votes polled the Democrats appear to have about 8,000 majority. The Republicans, however, still claim that they have carried the State and that Packard will be the next Governor of Louisiana.
